Deputy minister suspends head of cattle inspections

By Guardian Reporter

LIVESTOCK and Fisheries Deputy minister Pauline Gekul yesterday suspended the head of livestock inspections at Ruvu Darajani centre, Gabriel Lyakurwa for allegedly smuggling cattle, causing loss of government revenue.

She also directed the Coast Regional Commissioner Eng. Evarist Ndikilo to take to task staff of the Bagamoyo District Council who were colluding with the suspect.

Gekul made the decision after RC Ndikilo raised the allegations during the recent visit at the centre located in Bagamoyo District.

Ndikilo said his investigation revealed that the head of the centre had been collaborating with unscrupulous colleagues to smuggle livestock sent to the centre for inspection before being allowed to be taken to other auction stations.

"In my investigation I discovered that this smuggling involves a network of many people including some citizens, businessmen and civil servants. For example, on February 17, there were five vehicles that brought cattle to the centre for inspection, but only one vehicle went to Dar es Salaam as usual, while the rest of the herd was taken secretly to Kisarawe, Kibaha and Kidogozero village," the RC told the deputy minister.

Following the allegations, deputy minister Gekul suspended the official, saying that the ministry would set up a probe team to investigate the matter, including going through all the reports to determine how much government revenue was lost and all those found to be involved will be severely punished.

"We cannot embezzle government revenues, it is not possible to have more than 33 million head of cattle, but the contribution of the livestock sector to GDP does not exceed 7 per cent, it is because of games like this, we will not accept, and we will go to inspect all auction sites," she said.

Chalinze MP, Ridhiwani Kikwete urged the deputy minister to take serious measures to eliminate the entire network of criminals so that the council can earn big income.

WE ARE IN KIBIRIZI, a small town in Kilifi County, Kenya. The town is located in the northern part of the county, near the coast. It has a population of approximately 10,000 people and is surrounded by lush green fields and rolling hills.

The town is known for its agriculture, particularly banana cultivation, which is the main crop grown here.

Today, we are here to witness the annual Kibirizi Agricultural Fair, which is organized by the local government and community members. The fair aims to showcase the best agricultural practices and products from the area.

We arrive at the fair early in the morning, just as the sun is rising over the horizon.

As we walk through the fair grounds, we see various stalls displaying different types of agricultural products, such as fruits, vegetables, and grains. There are also several demonstration areas where farmers are showcasing their latest techniques and equipment.

One of the most prominent features of the fair is the agricultural exhibition hall, which is filled with various exhibits related to agriculture, such as tractors, irrigation systems, and modern farming equipment.

After spending some time at the fair, we decide to visit the nearby Kibirizi Market, which is located just outside the town. The market is a bustling hub of activity, with many people buying and selling fresh produce and other goods.

As we walk through the market, we notice that the prices for most items are relatively low compared to those in larger cities like Nairobi.

Overall, our visit to Kibirizi was a great experience, and we learned a lot about the local agriculture and economy.

After leaving the market, we head back to our hotel in Nairobi, where we will be staying for the duration of our trip. We are excited to continue our journey and explore more of Kenya's beautiful landscapes and rich culture.

"Kenya has a lot to offer tourists, and I am excited to show them around," says our tour guide, who is a local resident of Nairobi.

"Kenya is a safe and welcoming country, and I am happy to help tourists navigate the city and surrounding areas," he adds.
